Biological templates for antireflective current collectors for photoelectrochemical cell applications.

Three-dimensional (3D) structures such as nanowires, nanotubes, and nanorods have the potential to increase surface area, reduce light reflection, and increase charge carrier transport. The unique structures and the suppression of light reflection make these virus-templated surfaces ideal for photoelectrochemical applications.