Proteins that switch folds.
An increasing number of proteins demonstrate the ability to switch between very different fold topologies, expanding the repertoire of protein functions. These proteins can encode a stable fold while simultaneously hiding latent propensities for alternative states with novel functions.